As no such order ever, it could be shown that low rents, comhas been issued the overcrowding section bined with adequate police protection and Post Office and Klong Talat, on the east bank has remained inoperative, and, the hon. gen- lighting, would attract the population to the of the river Meinam. Here several new streets tleman went on to say, the question has now outskirts and so relieve the congestion in to be decided whether it would not be better the centre of the town it would be well worth running at right angles to the river. All these to repeal the latter paragraph altogether and considering whether it would not be prudent leave the power entirely in the hands of the to place land on the market on terms which Sanitary Board instead of having to come to would encourage building. The land might the solidity of the intended superstructure. the Governor in Council from time to time be sold subject to a periodical readjustment | Meanwhile the land is being raised with the to get certain districts proclaimed. He of the Crown rents, so that when the districts the site, while between the foundations are filled further intimated that when the Council became thickly populated the Colonial went into committee on the Bill he might Treasury would share in the prosperity and have to introduce some amendment in respect the Colony in the long run be no loser. to this section. The Bill passed through committee at the last meeting of Council, but no such amendment was introduced.

At the time the Public Health Bill was passing through the Legislative Council there was undoubtedly very considerable opposition from Liverpool, left Bingapore on Tuesday mornto the provisions relating to overcrowding. The magnitude of the evil was not so fully understood then as it has since become, but the principal cause of the opposition may, we think, be traced to the fear that the matter might be dealt with in a hasty or ill-considered manner and that it was better to endure existing ills than incur unknown ones that might be more serious. The great point taken by the opposition was that it would be worse than useless to turn people out of the areas now overcrowded until accommodation had been provided for them elsewhere. Confidence in the Sanitary Board about to be created by the Bill and in the Government was not at the time so strong as pupils of the Victoria School and not of Victoria to preclude the suspicion that if the power College as we then stated. was given it might possibly be used in that direction. Both the Government and the public understand the question better now they are notall blessing at hat come from above. asin than they did then, but it is one bristling with difficulties, and any scheme put forward for been-cakes on board the barque Don Justo, was Authorities at home have been working at the problem for years past, but in a recent home paper we read that very little headway seems to be made in dealing with the overcrowding question in the poorer neighbourhoods of London. In Soho the Roman Catholic priest of the district complains that the houses of the poor are being pulled down constantly, while practically nothing is done to rehouse them. The rents of the model dwellings are probibitive to the very poor. The fact-is that many middle-class people now live in them; and on the other band the style of the mansions built by the Middle Class Dwellings Company, in Buckingham Palace Boad for instance, would seem bardly commensurate with middleclass pockets. The slums which once existed in the neighbourhood of Chelsea Barracks are nearly all demolished, the site being nov mostly covered with fine houses and christened Sloane Gardens. The above remarks are not very encouraging for local effort in the same direction, but the statement of the correspondent, though no doubt it contains some truth, is, we believe, unduly pessimistic, for there can be little doubt that some appreciable improvement in the housing of the lower classes in the metropolis bas been effected. Still, it is clear that the sub ject is surrounded with difficulty and cannot

On one point a very decided opinion may be expressed, and that is, that the Authorilatest and most approved kind, and we ties ought by all possible means to encourare well able to compete in quality with age voluntary movements in the direction of mitigating the evil. It has been suggested that the surplus population would spread out naturally from the centre of the town to the suburbs, especially to the westward, if increased police protection were afforded built at Kennedytown, but so far has not whenever practicable, are despatched by first been occupied. Gordon at was taken into the Magist rate of burt and according to General Gordon's statement which he thought a great deal of attention one to be paid, Mr. Ward on being asked to sign the information had great rejuctance to sign, and is was only when it was pointed out by the Magistrate's clerk that the words "I charge" were necessary before the Magistrate was likely to orgive a warrant that he consented to put his name to it. There was not a word of evidence connecting Mr. Smith with this and this must be remombered in favour of Ward and was the newspaper extracts, and it was question for them to decide whether the state ments in these extracts went to show malice But the real operation they would have to consider was, were these men seting solely in the interests of justice, or did they deliberately put their heads together to work the ruin o Minhinnett? Did Ward, in pursuance of that arrangement, with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Smith, go and lay that information, or did he go voluntarily and independently of Mr. Smith ! They (the jury) must consider that question carefully. His Lordship then quoted from "Russell on ('rime" as to what constituted conspiracy, which showed that conspiracy did necessarily mean the meeting together of two or more persons, but might be proved by their actions. Mr. Smith evidently believed there was something in the statement which he placed in the hands of the Registrar-General. He sawhim. and it was arranged that Ward should give forwhether Mr. Smith's object was simply to bring that information. They would have to consider the information he possessed to the knowledge of the authorities, believing the statement to be true, or at all events that there was something in it, or whether it was an arrangement between Ward and Smith so as to get the law put in motion, and in the end to put this man Minhingett in prison. While not believing that the statement was true, did they combine to get the Registrar-General to make inquiry ? It was a pity if Mr. Smith consulled a legal adviser that he did not call him to say that he had advised him that he had some case, as that would have gone a great way in his favour. In the letter of the 9th September he said he had taken legal advice. Whether from oversight or not the legal adviser was not put in the box. As to the charge against Minhinnett, there was no evidence whatever that he committed the rape, nothing to justify the Magistrate in committing the case. The only evidence was that of Ng An. and she distinctly contradicted herself on several points. As to whether there was malice in the article, that was a point the jury would have to decide. As to the disappearance of Ng An, he was not disposed to think that Minhinnett had juduced her to disappear. but what was most extraordinary, and what he would wish to point out, was this woman Goulbourn-Minhinnett's witness-going to Mr. Smith and telling him that Ng An had left the colony. He would again remind the jury that

PEKING.

The canal route between Peking and Tungshow is not so well known to travellers and tourists as it deserves to be, for it is the prottiest of all the approaches to the capital. The path along the high bank of the canal leads past a succession of really beautiful places, mostly tombs of course, and the view is everywhere more extensive than can be obtained from any of the other roads, and it is free from dust.
